You can't visit another world if you're constantly distracted by this one.

④ READ WITH A PENCIL.

"The intellectual is, quite simply, a human being who has a pencil in his or her hand when reading a book."

—George Steiner

(But do not write in a library book or you will go to Hell.)

⑨ PRACTICE SAYING,
"IT WASN'T FOR ME."

Connecting with a book is about being the right reader in the right place at the right time. You have to feel free to skip books, quit books, or maybe even come back to them later.

A book that isn't for you may be the perfect book for somebody else.

Also: You're a different you today than you were yesterday.
That book that wasn't for you today might be just the right book for you tomorrow.

Reach for it in all the spare moments you'd usually pull out your phone.

When you share your favorite books, you meet the people who love those kinds of books, too. They'll give you even more to read.

We all love things that other people think are garbage. You have to have the courage to keep loving your garbage.

Date a lot of books until you find one you want to settle down with. Read more than one book and more than one kind of book at a time. Let the authors talk to each other.

Read old books. They're "shelf-stable": they stay the same, but we change, so every time we pick up an old book, it becomes a new book.

Go to book stores and libraries.
You make magical discoveries in a room full of books. You go hunting for one book and you find an even better one shelved a few books down from it.
